

Project Access Northwest now serving King, Snohomish and Kitsap counties

Partnerships and expansion are key elements of strategic plan for 2013–2017

Sallie Neillie
Executive Director

In November 2012, Project Access Northwest began serving Kitsap County residents through partnerships with Harrison Medical Center (Bremerton) and The Doctors Clinic (Silverdale).

“We’re excited about moving into Kitsap County,” says Sallie Neillie, Project Access NW executive director. “Our organization is expanding and preparing for health care reform.”

Neillie and the Project Access NW Board of Directors have been working on a strategic plan for the organization and expanding the number of patients served is a big part of it.

“Our case management services for uninsured or underinsured patients will be valuable for organizations that are suddenly seeing an influx of Medicaid patients after health care reform,” Neillie explains. “The relationships we build with clinicians are dependent, in part, on the patients blending seamlessly into the clinicians’ practice and requiring little or no more work than the general population. We have provided case management for this population of patients since our inception.”

Today more than 95 percent of Project Access NW patients keep their appointments (compared to fewer than 70 percent in typical uninsured populations) and volunteer providers cite Project Access NW’s case management services as one of the reasons they volunteer.

Project Access NW focuses on four major areas of the care continuum.

- Primary care medical referral to specialty care appointments.
- Primary care dental referral to advanced dentistry appointments.
- Care coordination for patients needing inpatient and outpatient surgery.
- Reduction in inappropriate emergency department use.

Increasingly, Project Access NW is seen as a local resource for providing case management and care coordination for the low-income uninsured and patients with state-sponsored insurance. Regardless of how the details of Medicaid expansion and health benefit exchanges unfold, Project Access NW is uniquely positioned to serve the growing population of patients needing access to specialty medical and advanced dental care and care coordination for surgery.

“Care coordination unseen, but an important part of our work” Neillie explains. “By working closely with uninsured patients and specialty providers over the past six years, we realize that we provide a valuable service in coordinating care for patients who require surgery.”

SOLUTION: Volunteer support

Volunteers add expertise to Project Access Northwest

Mary Zwerling, program manager for managed care at Public Health Seattle & King County, is finishing a Health Informatics degree program with Western Governor's University and recently completed an 80-hour practicum at Project Access Northwest under the mentorship of Jane Gunwaldsen and Sallie Neillie. Zwerling anticipates the completion of her degree program in March 2013.

"At the heart of my interest in health informatics* is service to the patient," Zwerling explains. "In the midst of the complexities of Electronic Health Record implementations, data analytics, changes in reimbursement and managed care programs it can be easy to lose sight of our common goal—improving the health status of our patients. At Project Access NW, I encountered an environment that responsibly and sensitively utilizes health information to enhance the continuum of care for the most vulnerable patients—those who are uninsured or underinsured. Project Access NW epitomizes the health informatics discipline for me—a multi-disciplinary group of health professionals coming together as a community to ensure an effective path for the patient through the specialty care process and back to the medical home. I am so impressed with the work being done at Project Access NW, from the concerned and caring attitude of the case managers to the cutting-edge quality improvements and technological advancements being implemented in this wonderful organization. Thank you for caring for the communities you serve and providing this exemplary practicum experience!"

Jane Gunwaldsen, Project Access Northwest's administrative manager, and volunteer Mary Zwerling focused on Project Access NW's health informatics during Zwerling's recent practicum.

* Health Informatics is the discipline at the intersection of health care, information science and computer science. The practice deals with the resources, devices and methods required to optimize the acquisition, storage, retrieval and use of information in health and biomedicine services.

INSPIRATION: We hear from grateful patients

We are always delighted to hear from patients whose health has improved because they received specialty medical or dental services through Project Access Northwest.

For some patients, getting healthy means they can return to work:

“There are no words to express my gratitude for what Project Access Northwest does. After years of (having) health insurance, I was laid-off and my insurance immediately cancelled, right when my hip started getting bad. Without your program, I know I was not far from a wheelchair. I AM A NEW PERSON and going back to work after a wonderfully short (hip replacement) recovery time.”
—J.M.

For others, it means a beloved family member is on the road to recovery after treatment for some tough medical challenges:

“Project Access Northwest (helped provide) for my son’s cardiovascular and gastroenterological procedures and is very much appreciated in our house!”
—A.B.

And for patients receiving care through our safety net clinics, Project Access NW provides coordinated care for all points in their care.

“Thank you to my Country Doctor Clinic primary care physician and all the doctors, specialists, nurses, hospitals and volunteers that make it possible for people like me and others to be able to obtain the care and services provided by all of you for our health and recuperation.”
—A.F.

The success stories of these patients are created through the generosity of our volunteer providers and health care partners. Thank you to the volunteers, hospital systems and medical equipment providers who make this possible. In the midst of health care change, it’s important to remember that patients are at the center of what we do. Improving their quality of life helps us all feel better.

“For example, we work on making certain the patient has a physical from the primary care provider in an appropriate time frame before surgery,” Neillie continues. “We make certain the right images are done. If there’s a joint replacement involved, we work with the artificial joint manufacturer to secure the donation. We also help patients get the durable medical equipment they require as they recover from surgery.”

In addition, through work with safety net providers, large health care systems are using Project Access NW’s services to find a health care home for patients who are regular users of emergency room services for primary care.

Watch for more details of our strategic plan as the year unfolds. We are pleased with our growth and preparation for health care reform and look forward to continuing our contributions to the health care community and the patients we serve.
